Mental Health Warrant through Provincial Court “Queen’s Bench Ministry of Justice” Saskatoon

If a person believes someone living with mental illness is a risk to themselves or someone else they can attempt to obtain a mental health warrant.

- The court will want to know if the person affected is willing to get help.
- Provide the court with information stating that you have offered to help the person affected but they have refused treatment.
- Provide examples of deterioration of the individual’s health and ability to function.
- State that the person has threatened suicide or displayed suicidal behaviour.
- State the person affected has threatened harm to others in any form.
- Take written documentation on the person’s behaviour with examples so you stay organized and focused.
- If the court issues the mental health warrant the police have up to seven days to arrest the individual. Once they arrest the person they take them to Royal University Hospital emergency department. It is up to the psychiatrist at the emergency department or the person’s own psychiatrist whether the person will be admitted to the Dube Centre for Mental Health. The court opens at 8:30 AM but they advise family members to phone them first.
